How to find the rewards your dog loves

You've brought that gorgeous, warm, cuddly puppy or rescue dog home. You know how important training your dog is. But you're not sure where to start.

Dogs are simple creatures and they do the things that get them what they want – that is, things they get rewards for. The basics of training are that you reward the behaviours you want and ignore, manage, or prevent those you don't want.

But what are the best rewards to use?

How do you find out what your dog wants and loves?

You'll find out by working through this checklist booklet.

What does your dog desire MOST?

There are fiv types of rewards you can give your dog:

TOUCH

ACCESS to Different

Places

Different dogs will prefer different things. Your job is to find out what your dog wants most. Here's how to do it. For each of the five sections, use the checklist to tick off the tings your dog loves — there's space to add things that aren't already mentioned too.

All dogs need food to survive and many dogs adore food more than anything else. It's also easy to use just give a piece of food to your dog whenever they do something you asked them to do.

Mixing up different treats is a good idea, not only to provide variety for your dog, but also so you can reward the best and most important responses your dog makes with their favourite yummy food.

Use the list below to tick the foods your dog loves – add to it if you have others.

If you're not sure, compare two different foods by holding some hidden in each hand. Offer your fists to your dog and see which he chooses first. Just make sure you don't offer anything that might be poisonous (see our free downloadable food help sheet on the website if you're not sure).

Is your dog a ball fanatic or a tug master?

Is chewing an old slipper their favourite pastime, or do they pick up every discarded plastic bottle on a walk?

Toy play can be a great alternative to food as a reward. Many dogs love a game of tug — my dog, Gus, prefers a tug game to food. Unless the food is chicken.

Find out what your dog loves to play with and note these in the table below. Remember that your dog might see many different things as toys.

#3: Touch

Giving praise through petting your dog is an important and sometimes overlooked reward.

Your dog has to love it though. For example, many dogs hate being patted on their head or ruffled around their head. (I had an uncle who did that to me – I hated it.) Gus adores being scratched on his bottom best of all.

Try out different types of touch on different parts of your dog. Which are the ones that make them squirm with delight? Which ones do they move away from?

Write down the types of touch your dog loves and where he prefers to be petted in the table, and mark their favourites.

What	Type?	(e.g. belly when lying on side, gentle rubs)
	Stroking
	Patting
	Scratching
	Rubbing
	Tickling
	Cuddling

#4: Aftention From Favourite Person or People

Did you have a favourite teacher at school? One whose lessons you loved going to?

Like it or not, dogs have favourites. Do you know who in your household your dog prefers? This can be fun to test! Two people at a time stand at least 3 metres apart, with your dog an equal distance away from you — you should be forming a triangle. Both people call the dog at the same time to see who he goes to first.

The importance of this is that the favourite person should always be the first to start training anything new as the dog will be most motivated to please their favourite person.

Mark your findings in the list below, in order of preference from favourite person to the least favourite. (Add more rows if you need.)

Activities & Places

pick the lead up? When you go outside, do they pull to get to the car? Are you like a jack-in-the-box all evening because your dog can't decide whether he wants to come inside or go outside? (Or is that just me?)

Using access to favourite places or activities is often overlooked as a reward.

A car journey is great a reward for many dogs — it certainly is for my dog, Gus. Being allowed up on the sofa with you for a cuddle, or going out into the garden or yard, or being allowed into a different room, or going out on lead — what's your dog's favourite?

Work out what places or activities your dog loves most by completing the following list, again in order of your dog's preference, adding more rows if you want.

WHAT/WHERE is your Dog's fav? (e.g. Going out in the garden) (e.g. Being let off-lead)

Summary

Using this worksheet to find out what things your dog loves most allows you to use these rewards to teach your dog quickly, simply and easily, what you want them to do.

BUT... simply teaching your dog to do something is only the start.

Do you want to keep getting exasperated because your dog doesn't do what you want them to?

Do you wish you didn't have to screech like a fishwife to try and get your dog back at the park?

Do you long for gentle country rambles together instead of being dragged down the road like a lump of wood trailing behind your dog as they pull you from (lamp)pillar to (gate)post?

You can use the information you've gained from working through this booklet to help you train your dog easily and quickly.

We can show you how in our Perfect Pet course, or you can follow the course in your own time anywhere in the world- available as a self-study course.

Why not join us? We'll help you achieve your Perfect Pet – and we guarantee you'll have fun learning how to train your dog, too.

Work out what your dog loves then we can help you train your dog in just six short weeks.

Our Perfect Pet course teaches you 32 games to train your dog. And we guarantee you'll have fun along the way. The course focuses on five key areas – building a great relationship with your dog, teaching them to walk on a loose lead, to come back when called, to enjoy being handled and groomed and it also teaches them to have good manners when meeting and greeting people and other dogs.

Training is not a luxury, but an essential. And now you've worked through the booklet to find out what things your dog loves, there isn't really an excuse not to get on with training.

Training is also the best way to tire your dog out – and tired dogs are happy dogs, which in turn produces happy humans.

(By the way, going for long walks or running round the park or beach for an hour won't always tire your dog – but it does make them super fit, so they'll need even more exercise for the same level of tiredness...)

Come and join us for some regular training fun. You'll be amazed how much training you'll get done, you and your dog will build an even closer bond, and as a bonus you'll have the best trained dog in your neighbourhood.

We'd love to see you.

Keep safe and plan some training,

Carol Clark
